

Interviewing Resources

by QUENNA L. BARRETT

"iPHONE RECORDING DEVO" by weeklydig is licensed under CC BY 2.0.

Are you a storyteller? Have you ever wanted to make a documentary about some super cool and unknown story in your family's history? Or maybe you've wanted to interview people in your neighborhood to get their perspective on a certain issue?

At the Goodman, we believe everybody has a story to tell, and in ripple, the wave that carried me home, the main character Janice narrates stories and experiences of her family through memory and flashbacks. In essence, she's a storyteller. Storytelling can look like lots of different things: playwriting, journalism, filmmaking, and yes, tik-toking.

StoryMaker is a digital resource hub that includes lesson plans, tutorials, and other resources for students and educators interested in content creation. It is a program of PBS News Hour Student Reporting Labs.

What Makes A Good Interview is a 50-minute lesson helping students learn how to develop good interview questions, and listen to their subjects with "empathy" and "curiosity."

For deeper interview practice and guidance, check out Art of the Interview, and Recording Oral History.